Kevin was a 39 year old attorney and partner at a law firm when, while playing basketball, he fell and hit his head against the goal post. Kevin momentarily lost consciousness. After regaining consciousness, he sat down for a while and began to feel better. He went home without seeking medical treatment.

At work the next day Kevin was highly sensitive to light and noise and began experiencing severe headaches so he went to see his doctor. After some tests, the doctor concluded Kevin had suffered a concussion and prescribed rest. Kevin had to take time off from work. His inability to work lasted longer than anticipated. Fortunately, Kevin had a ProVider Plus disability policy, which began paying benefits after he satisfied his elimination period.

When Kevin returned to work, he found he wasn’t able to keep up with his usual duties due to his continuing symptoms and as a result, suffered a loss of income. Kevin’s policy then provided him with Residual Disability benefits for his 40% loss of income.

Further medical testing confirmed that Kevin had serious cognitive deficits that would prevent him from competently performing his duties as an attorney or as a partner in the firm. Kevin’s firm genuinely cared for him but could not keep him on as partner. Instead, they offered him a position as a clerk with administrative duties. Thanks to his policy’s true own-occupation definition of total disability, Kevin has been able to continue working at the firm in another capacity while also receiving his monthly Total Disability benefits.

To-date, Kevin has been on claim for more than five years. Each year, his policy’s 3% Cost of Living Adjustment Rider (COLA) adjusts his benefit to help keep pace with inflation. These annual adjustments will grow his benefit at a 3% compounded rate and will continue for the life of his claim.

Kevin is extremely fortunate to have protected his income with a comprehensive disability policy. ProVider Plus is designed to provide more benefits, sooner and for a longer duration than most other policies. Here are some examples of what Kevin found most important about his policy:

- CHOICE TO WORK IN ANOTHER OCCUPATION: With ProVider Plus True Own-Occupation coverage, we consider you totally disabled if, solely due to injury or sickness, you’re not able to perform the material and substantial duties of your occupation, even if you are at work in another occupation. Kevin had the energy, interest, and motivation to stay on at the firm in another role. His ProVider Plus policy made it possible for him to do this and not forfeit Total Disability benefits.

- DOLLAR-FOR-DOLLAR REPLACEMENT OF LOST INCOME: When Kevin returned to work and suffered a 40% loss of income, his policy paid the full monthly benefit of $8,000. That’s because under our Residual Disability Benefit Rider’s Loss of Income Indemnity, for the first 12 months that Residual Disability benefits are payable, we replace lost income dollar-for-dollar up to the policy’s monthly benefit.

- COST OF LIVING ADJUSTMENTS: Kevin’s COLA Rider will grow his monthly benefit annually while his claim continues. Since there are no limits to the number of COLA adjustments made before age 65, should Kevin remain disabled, his benefit will grow to $16,750 by age 64.

- PREMIUM VS. BENEFIT: Kevin owned his disability policy for six years before he needed to use it. His premium payments totaled $13,318. Since premium payments are waived while receiving benefits, he will not make another premium payment for the remainder of his claim. Assuming Kevin remains disabled, his policy will yield significant financial value over the course of his claim by providing him a total anticipated benefit of $3,677,092.
